Pinkerton range Detective, Levi Hill, is sent to investigate a burned out wagon train and the disappearance of the men, women, and children who were traveling west to homestead.

The tragedy appears to be the work of renegade Indians, but Levi has doubts and questions. Where are the bodies? What was the motive? Did someone else want to stop these families from homesteading? While searching for answers to these questions Levi faces unexpected opposition from local residents. The overwhelming odds against him would be fatal if not for the help of a strangely dressed foreigner with unusual fighting skills.

Finally, a beautiful rancher's daughter and an empathic widowed storekeeper cause Levi to consider whether his chosen profession left room for a wife and family.

Once again, Billy Hall demonstrates his ability to transport the reader back into the old west on a breathtaking ride. Suspense, action, humor, and romance are packaged to invoke a very satisfying emotional experience. For more Levi Hill, read the prequel to this book, Montana Rescue.
